300 Chinese Slain as Japan Renews War on 'Bandits'

TOKYO PREDICTS SANGUINE COMBAT AROUND CHINCHOW

Nanking Reiterates De- termination To Keep Troops at Manchurian Capital and Resist Any Advance of Nipponese.

LEAGUE'S COUNCIL FAILS OF PROGRESS

Working Masses of Both Countries Called On To Unite Against 'Imperial- istic War' in East.

By The Associated Press.

Japanese military headquarters in Mukden started an intensive campaign against bandits in south Manchuria and dispatched three detachments to eradicate them. Three hundred Chinese were reported to have been killed in the operations.

Informed circles in Tokyo predicted a sanguine Sino-Japanese clash unless Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang withdraws his troops from Chinchow. General Honjo was reported to have served a final warning on him to that effect.

A spokesman for the Chinese government in Nanking reiterated that Chinese troops in the Chinchow area would not be withdrawn and would resist in the event of a Japanese attack. Foreign Minister Koo withdrew his resignation and planned to carry on.

The acting committee of the League council in Paris conferred with Japanese representatives over their compromise resolution but reached no agreement which would guarantee peace.

Japanese and Chinese delegates to the International Trades Union congress in Moscow appealed to the working masses of both countries to unite against what they term "the imperialistic war in Manchuria."

JAPANESE ARMY REnews VIGOROUS CHARGE MUKDEN, Manchuria, Dec. 6.—(AP)—A marked revival of the Japanese army's operations against Chinese bandits in areas adjacent to the South Manchurian railway zone was observed today.

Reuters News Agency reported today that 300 Chinese were killed when Japanese airplanes bombed bandits at Kungtaipu, southwest of Mukden, and at Tienpingtai, near Hsienmuntun. Another fray was reported at Changtu, north of Mukden.

Part of the Japanese battalion stationed at Changtu Station, between Kaiyuan and Siping, was said to have been ordered to "conduct a considerable number" of bandits, because the scene is only 30 miles northeast of Fukuken, reported to be the stronghold of a bandit force of 10,000 men and a regular Chinese infantry.

The Japanese commander at Ying-kow reported to Mukden that the Chinese soldiers were menacing his command. Airplanes were sent to protect him and his two companies. A spokesman for the Japanese headquarters said the planes had neither bombed nor used their machine guns on the Chinese force.

TOKYO SEES BITTER CLASH AS INEVITABLE OCCURRENCE

TOKYO, Dec. 6.—(AP)—A Sino-Japanese clash on a much larger scale than in the past appeared inevitable to informed circles today after Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang disregards the Chinese government's rejection of the neutral zone proposal, and withdraws his troops from Manchuria.

The Japanese army is determined that all semblance of Marshal Chang's authority in the Chinchow area must be eradicated. The army is supported on this point by the civil departments of the government.

Press dispatches from Mukden reported General Honjo had issued a final warning to Marshal Chang to withdraw his troops from the area.

Hitler Lashes Debt Plans; Says Germany Can't Pay All

Rising Nationalist Leader Declares World Must Choose Between Public and Private Obligations; Praises English and U. S. Stand But Turns Fire on France, Laval.

BY ADOLF HITLER.

Leader of the National Socialist Party of Germany. (Addressed to the Reichstag, Dec. 6, 1931.)

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—What the German people need today is a new diagnosis of its economic and industrial situation, even a blind man realizes that Germany is at the end of its power today.

The talk of fulfillment of both private and political debts in the most laughable thing imaginable, it is not so sad and so tragic. Unfortunately, this is the case.

Anybody familiar with the speech Premier Laval delivered recently in Paris must admit that official French opinion has not progressed one inch and has not even begun to realize the gravity of the economic problem of the world today.

To be sure, enlightened British and American opinion years ago recognized the suicidal insanity of the economic arrangement forced by the victorious powers of Germany in 1918-1919. It will be remembered that Professor Maynard Keynes, of Cambridge University, raised his voice in the critical days, calling the attention of the world public to the economic disaster working behind the tyrannical paragraphs and the hideously insane Versailles document.

Victory Belonged Brains.

Although Austro-German and American statesmen in those days, alas, the malady of victory belated the brains of responsible European statesmen in those days.

In vain Count von Brockdorff-Razzeburg, the German delegate to Versailles, refused to sign the Versailles treaty. His protests were howled down and he himself was forced to leave his post, making room for representatives, then supreme, of the Catholic, center and international socialist parties.

U. S. SEEKING LOAN OF $1,300,000,000

Announcement of Financial Plans Accentuates Need for Tax Boost.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—(UP)—A new treasury borrowing of $1,300,000,000 tonight accentuated the need for tax increases, governmental economy, or other plans which congress will take up tomorrow in an effort to "make both ends meet."

The offering of government securities for money to operate the government this year in the face of a deficit which may reach $1,700,000,000 in nine-month period, Secretary J. W. Mellon this year. The deficit December 3 was $856,367,587.

Mellon embarked upon the borrowing at the session of the national debt—last March with a $500,000,000 issue of short-term notes, followed by $800,000,000 in June and $1,100,000,000 in September. Of the total, $800,000,000 was in long-term bonds.

Of the new issue, $600,000,000 is in one-year treasury notes, payable December 15, 1932, and will pay 3.4 per cent interest. The balance includes $300,000,000 in six-month certificates of indebtedness, paying 2.34 per cent per year, and $400,000,000 in nine-month certificates, paying 3 per cent.

These issues, bringing the year's total to $3,700,000,000, are expected to be sufficient until provision is made by congress either for reducing retirement or increasing taxes. An increase in taxes would be made effective probably on next March 15, when the returns and first payments are due on 1931 incomes.

The new treasury securities will be sold through federal reserve banks. The notes will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000, and $100,000. Denominations for the certificates of indebtedness are the same except that no $100 denominations will be issued.

The rates of interest are higher than on previous issues, but were set by officials who were determined that the issue would be fully sold. Last September's issue was held open until the last hour, when the total subscriptions were less than $100,000,000 over the $1,100,000,000 goal.

Money at the present time is said to be "easy" for loans on industrial and business ventures, but "tight" for governmental propositions such as the one now offered by the treasury.

'Mother' Jones' Memory Honored by Unionists

MOUNT OLIVE, Ill., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Organized labor today paid homage at the shrine of its famous feminine leader, "Mother" Jones.

In the Union Miners' cemetery here, where victims of the Virden riots, in which she participated, are buried not far from her own grave, a detachment of the armies which she inspired on many industrial battlefields gathered to honor her memory.

The commemorative exercises were in charge of two locals of the United Mine Workers of America, the union which idolized her during her turbulent life for her unwavering advocacy of its cause in many controversial cases. The principal speaker was Frank Bender, of Taylorville, former president of the Ohio Mine Workers.

Sorrow and trouble bring people closer together in a common bond of defense against assaults of peace and happiness, and at this season, though trials be great for thousands of people, the humanity of man to man will be expressed in a more definite manner than ever before.

'FINANCING URGY' B SENATORS FLETCHER, HAYDEN

Floridan and Arizonan Say Steps Must Be Tak- en To Correct Practice of Holding Companies.

BY GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—On the eve of the opening of congress the voices of two additional democratic members of the senate were heard today in support of editorial demands expressed by The Atlanta Constitution for congressional action to check re-financing and merger activities of large corporate interests.

Senator Duncan V. Fletcher, of Florida, and Senator Carl Hayden, of Arizona, rated among the conservative element of their party, both announced they would support a move for a general consideration of these menacing conditions.

"There is no question about the obligation resting upon congress in the premises," said the Florida senator, himself a native Georgian. "For ten years the country has witnessed an orgy of corporate financing that should have warned us of what was to follow."

Will Support Federal Action.

"I am informed by responsible persons that during the height of the speculative fever which swept the country in 1928 and 1929 securities were unloaded upon the public through 'false representations' at a price of over 50 billion dollars more than their actual worth, resulting in many bank failures and the throwing of thousands of persons out of work when the final crash came."

"In the face of such startling declarations congress cannot afford to sit idly by. It should be our duty to go thoroughly into the situation and determine what measure of federal regulation and control can be undertaken as a remedy. I will support moves to this end."

Senator Hayden is at present the ranking democratic member of the commerce committee. He is a former chairman of that body, also, having presided over its affairs when the democrats were in control under the Wilson administration. As one of the oldest members of the senate in point of service his adherence will add weight to any measure he supports.

Senator Hayden is an old-fashioned states rights democrat who doesn't believe in the federal government intruding too much in state affairs, but he is emphatic in his opinion that "when great holding companies are organized in state with the primary purpose of controlling business properties in many states, it is obvious that a nationwide interest is involved which is, and which should be, the concern of the federal government."

Pillage of Consumer and Investor.

Referring to that part of The Constitution's "Pillage of the Consumer and the Innocent Investor" editorial, wherein it is pointed out that the democratic platform of 1924 strongly condemned "financial strangling of innocent investors," Senator Hayden said:

"The democratic platform of 1924 consequently lays down the principle that federal government legislation should be based. Congress should outlaw every form of high finance which does not conform to the laws of the state wherein promoters may do business. Congress should make sure that there is no interstate commerce in watered stock. Further, congress should enact a federal law to supervise the disposal to the public of any securities issued by such companies."

Where States Are Responsible.

Senator Hayden supplemented his demand for federal regulation of holding companies, however, by adding that "all states can, and many states do, adequately protect their own citizens from loss by properly supervising the sale of stocks and bonds issued by corporations organized under the state, and of doing business within the state."

"The power of the state to control the issue of such securities is ample and needs no federal reinforcement," he concludes the senator.

After serving his state for 16 consecutive years in the house of representatives, Senator Hayden was elected to the upper chamber, where his first term will expire in 1933. He entered the senate with a comprehensive working knowledge of how things are done in Washington and, although he is not a ready debater or fluent speaker, his homey southwestern manner and likable personality have won him many friends in congress. Being a member of the appropriations committee, he is fully acquainted with government finance. When a principle is involved—Senator Hayden is an indomitable fighter.

WITNESS JAILED IN MURDER CASE

J. T. Dailey, Figure in Lichtenstein Slaying, Is Held on Warrant.

J. T. Dailey, state witness against J. B. Lee, alias Sumner Compton, in Lee's trial for the murder of Benjie Lichtenstein, is held in Fulton tower without bond pending a hearing before Justice of the Peace W. Y. Norman, of Lakewood Heights, on a warrant charging Dailey with murder and perjury.

Dailey was lodged in the tower at 2:30 o'clock Sunday morning following his arrest by Sheriff Jake Hall, of DeKalb county; two DeKalb deputies and Deputies Sheriff Joe Schilling and Lee Whitley, of Fulton county. He was arrested at his home, 1420 McPherson avenue, S. E., on a warrant sworn out by Arthur W. Powell, attorney for Lee.

Lee is under death sentence for the murder of Lichtenstein and will be given a hearing by Judge Edgar E. Pomeroy on December 15 on a motion for a new trial. Harry Kosnoff, alleged driver for Lee on the night of the murder, is under a life sentence as an accomplice.

Attorney Powell indicated following Lee's conviction, that he had uncovered new evidence in the case and would seek a new trial on that basis by an appeal to the supreme court if the motion for a new trial should be denied by the trial judge.

Testimony at Lee's trial developed that a revolver introduced by the state as the Lichtenstein death weapon had been stolen from Dailey. Lichtenstein was slain in his Ponce de Leon apartment. There were no eyewitnesses to the slaying, and the state was a circumstantial case around Lee and Kosnoff, showing Lee as the man who fired the shot and Kosnoff as the man who waited in the car. George W. Cox Jr., a third defendant in the case, is awaiting trial.

Solicitor-General John A. Boykin Sunday night said that he had no

Battle of a Thousand and One Hands For Bridge Supremacy Begins Tonight

Eyes of the bridge playing world are centered on New York as Ely Culbertson, leading exponent of the approach-forcing system of playing contract, and Sidney Lenz, who laid down the rules for the one-two-three style of playing the nation's indoor pastime, Monday begin their long-awaited tourney, a match of 150 rubbers, to determine which has the right idea. Mrs. Culbertson will aid her husband, while Lenz is paired with Oswald Jacoby, another genius. Charity will win $6,000.

Bridge Battle of Century Will Attract Attention of Entire Card-Playing World.

BY ELY CULBERTSON.

(Copyright, 1931, by The Constitution by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—The stage is set tonight for the biggest show in the history of bridge. The play to be offered is the Battle of One Thousand and One Hands. The place is the private apartment of the Culbertsons in the Hotel Chatham in midtown Manhattan.

This apartment contains an ideal stage for the presentation of the drama in the living room which will furnish the cast with their platform. An essential requirement for the successful working out of the dramatic scenes is concentration and silence. The actors in the play will not seek applause.

The curtain rises at 9 p. m. tomorrow. The audience will extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada's snow-capped mountains to the sunny Gulf of Mexico. It will be even greater than that, because the play will also be heard by millions across the Atlantic and beyond the Pacific.

The "Battle of One Thousand and One Hands" is written in 20 acts and 150 scenes. The act represents a session of play. The scene is a symbol for a rubber of bridge. In these statistics, I am not adding the private scenes which may from time to time occur between the members of the all-star cast or interested kibitzers. You all know about bridge games.

The "Battle of One Thousand and One Hands" has this in common with ancient Greek tragedy. In the background hover the fates, but Lady Luck, after all, cannot survive the long siege of 150 rubbers of bridge. Scientists tell us that the chances that one side or the other will hold even 34 per cent of the aces and kings is extremely remote. The outcome of the drama then, will rest upon the insignificant stage properties, but the use the actors make of them. Each session or each act, to carry out the simile, will last at least five hours. Thus, the drama of "One Thousand and One Hands" is modeled after the Chinese theater, where the presentation of a play covers several weeks.

The scene shifters will include reporters, special correspondents from American and European newspapers, officials, telegraph operators, army officials, porters, matrons, hotel attendants, social and executive secretaries, editors, book publishers, presidents and magazine publishers.

POST AND GATTY LAND AT AIRPORT

Famed Airmen To Deliver Two Lectures Today; 500 Witness Arrival.

Swooping over the airport in their trim white monoplane just as dusk was falling, Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, famous aviators, whose roundabout the world flight was accounted the outstanding aviation achievement of 1931, landed at Candler field late Sunday afternoon.

Although the fliers were delayed in their scheduled start from Columbus and were more than an hour late in arriving at Atlanta, fully 500 aviation fans were on hand to greet the noted pair. The crowd swarmed about the Winnie Mae, the famed Lockheed Vega in which the globe-circling flight was made, and guards were forced to clear a way for the ship, which was stored for the night in the hangar of the Blevins Aircraft Corporation.

Officials of city, state and county, as well as officers of the Betty Harrison Jones chapter of Disabled American Veterans, which organization is sponsoring the visit of the aviators, were on hand to extend Atlanta's official greeting. This group included W. B. "Cap" Joyner, of the D. A. V. chapter; I. K. Hay, secretary to Governor Richard B. Russell Jr., and Luke Arnold, Mayor James L. Key's executive secretary.

Taken to Hotel.

Soon after the landing, the aviators were placed in waiting automobiles and carried to the Atlanta hotel headquarters during the visit.

Two lectures will be made by the flying pair today, both under the auspices of the D. A. V. chapter. At 4 o'clock this afternoon, a lecture will be delivered, particularly for youthful ears, while at 8 o'clock tonight another talk will be delivered. Both will be made at the Paramount theater. At 8:30 o'clock tonight the fliers will be honor guests at a banquet at the Atlanta, where notables will be present to meet the visitors.

Mayor Key and his secretary, Luke Arnold, and I. K. Hay, secretary to Governor Russell, will be guests at the dinner. Post and Gatty will be escorted to the theater by the Disabled Veterans' drum and bugle corps following the dinner.

Many Atlantans To Brighten Season By Lighting Living Christmas Trees

BY BEN COOPER.

Have you made up your mind to light a living tree this Christmas? Many Atlantans will brighten the city during the Yuletide season with illuminated lawn shrubbery, in accordance with the custom sponsored by The Constitution and the Camp Fire Girls.

There is something cheery about twinkling colored lights, shining through the cold, frosty air during Christmas week. It smacks of hospitality and best wishes, and carries a message of good will. Lighted living trees are not luxuries and even the most humble homes can join in the movement as well as the palatial mansions.

The Constitution will give daily the names of those who promise to light living trees. If you are willing to do your bit toward spread a little Christmas cheer in this fashion of the electrical age, call Walnut 5365. The Constitution, or Walnut 3738, the Camp Fire Girls, and let it be known.

Andy Park residents already are preparing to wire their shrubbery and J. Hope Turner, secretary of the Andy Park Civic League, said that he expects his neighborhood to light more trees than any before.

Nation's Lawmakers As- semble With Problems Pressing and Political Power Almost Evenly Divided Between Parties

PRESIDENTIAL YEAR CASTS BIG SHADOW

Taxes, Farm Relief, Pro- hibition and Moratorium Some of Sub-Headings in Catalog of Worries.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Congress meets tomorrow to wrestle with mighty issues in a session made significant by business tribulation, the approaching presidential election and close political divisions.

President Hoover early today completed his annual message charting for the federal legislature a course by which he hopes to quicken the stride of returning prosperity.

Leaders of both parties have placed economic legislation at the top of the session's program. The Hoover moratorium, taxes, agricultural problems and prohibition also are to receive early consideration.

Faced with a numerically strong political hostility in both branches, the president determined to leave his recommendations in the hands of the republican minority in the house and the divided republican majority in the senate. He will seek no coalition.

Democratic Harmony.

About to take control of the house for the first time in 12 years, democratic leaders continued their parleys with caution and harmony their watchword. They are awaiting the administration's program. They will indorse what they like.

The president read over his message to the republican leaders—Senator Watson of Indiana and Representative Snell, of New York—at a White House meeting lasting until after last midnight. He then sent it to the printers.

Senator Watson described it as "a forward looking, constructive document dealing principally with economic issues."

The vital economic measures, revision of the national credit structure, tightening up of the banking system, railroad independence, and measures dealing with emergencies are to be considered on their merits, party leaders said today, and possibly on a nonpartisan basis.

More than 100 new voices will answer the opening roll calls at noon tomorrow in the house and senate. There will be independent speakers in the house and 17 in the senate, the vast majority of whom are democrats.

Brief Opening.

The opening session will be brief in the senate but the house will undertake to organize. The veteran "Jack" Garner, of Texas, is destined to succeed the coveted speaker's position with all 219 of the democrats reporting present tonight. The republican candidate, Representative Snell, will not have present all of the 214 votes his party.

On Tuesday, Mr. Hoover's message will be read separately in the senate and house. Other details of organization, including the senate intro-republican row over the continuation of George Moses, of New Hampshire, as president pro tem, will be worked out or at least talked out, on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The president will transmit on Wednesday the voluminous budget carrying his recommendations for appropriations to carry on the government during the coming year. On Thursday he will send to Capitol hill for ratification the new chapter of intergovernmental debts, already in effect with a majority of congress pledged to its support.

Philippine independence, the all-absorbing money question and silver issue are among the other legislative measures facing congress.

The session will be brief before it the president's request for American adherence to the World Court. It will receive early in the week several score nominations by the president for confirmation.

Among the important nominations will be new members for the tariff commission and farm board, numerous judicial appointees, and new members in almost every branch of the administrative government.

Hitler Hits Terms of Treaty, Praises Stand of U. S. and Britain

instance where what George Meredith would have called "the artistry of fate" turns the tables on world history.

If Germany were enabled by a world agreement and tariff arrangements to export the above-mentioned quantities of goods, and that is necessary if Germany is expected to pay tribute, then Germany probably would be the only thriving country on the planet. It would be German goods over all.

That is hardly the sense or the purpose of the Versailles treaty, and proves the absurdity of the entire arrangement.

Near End of Circle.

We are obviously near the end of a vicious circle. The Versailles treaty proved to be within 13 years the most formidable boomerang in the history of modern Europe. The world's political wisdom reached its end in a blind alley.

What will be done if our party gets power?

The world must not expect fireworks from me. The contrary is the case. True, Germany which is on its sickbed today will need an entirely different treatment from that prescribed by the Versailles quack doctors since 1919.

As will be remembered, Germany's reputation as a commercial nation of the first order before the war was based on Germany's progressive conservatism, and her solid honesty was almost a proverbial trademark. One of my chief aims is to restore the worldwide credit of German commerce, industry and finance.

It must not be believed that Germany and I stand for anything but the old, forgotten virtues of our forefathers, the frugality, inner discipline and honesty which are the cornerstones of any state and commonwealth. Saving must take place along the whole line. I mean a stop must be put to the extravagant methods used in obtaining loans, municipal and national.

Germany and I stand for this because, while respecting all private debts, we will cease to borrow capital as far as possible, and cease to enter loan arrangements at wicked interest, such as 12, 15 and more per cent.

I say all promiscuous borrowing must stop. I am confident the world will soon find itself different about Germany when it is proven that her sole aim is to reconquer and create confidence in our entire business dealings.

To Reveal Program.

It is inevitable that a firm, thoughtful impression made thus is going to do more good than a thousand silly conferences. This does not mean we refuse to listen to reason. The very contrary is the case.

It will be at Berlin that the unvarnished state of Germany's condition will be put before the world. It will be at Berlin where we will inform the world of our program, which is based on the Spartan state ideal.

Necessarily, the feeding, warming, clothing and housing of our suffering masses of men, women and children will be one of the first problems of our government. That it must be effective.

As a matter of fact the United States has already started to express an opinion on the present situation. I refer to the statements of Senator William E. Borah and Congressman Louis T. MacFadden.

Their genuine Americanism asserting itself in plain everyday language. That is perhaps the reason why the man in the street has taken an interest in the involved problem. Senator Borah today is almost as well known in the world as any of the great statesmen of the past 50 years.

The now historic clash between Premier Laval and Senator Borah has served to illuminate the world problem. On one side is regional, regional narrowness; on the other side, a vast capacity to visualize problems.

defect largely in a more or less summary manner is readily understood. Only one method is adoptable and that is what will make the mark to further in order to feed our people and pay our debts. I regret very much that I am unable to give further details of this point. Why should I, by promulgating carefully thought out plans, act as a promoter to the moribund system of today?

Regarding unemployment, doubtless the German state will be able to solve this problem in a large degree through public works carefully calculated, however, not to interfere with existing industries. Touching the gold standard, I regret that I am compelled to shroud myself in silence, for reasons similar to the above.

I wish to say, however, that I see no reason why Germany should take the initiative.

Let us to Gold Standard.

It must be understood, notwithstanding that the gold standard dogma, like all dogmas, has a limit, especially when overdone to the degree that France is doing it today. As is well known, France is hoarding practically the entire gold of the world in bank vaults in Paris and this is being done not only on financial grounds, but is primarily political.

French imperialism, the desire to dominate Europe, yes, the world, is the sinister political decisions of the present day from Washington, London, Vienna, Rome and Budapest. All are practically paralyzed by France's domination of the gold situation, and therewith the political situation.

France is permitted to continue to pursue her policy of financial bullying and political extortion, as is now the case, the world in a certain sense will become French, France thus realizing her program of world domination, compared with which certain dreams of Louis XIV appear insignificant and innocent. The area between the Cape of Good Hope and Constantinople has become virtually French territory.

The rest of Europe will have to bow down before the new master whose manpower in case of war will come from Africa. The meaning every American school child can realize. Europe under French domination will mean to be in danger of becoming African. A parallel is the Roman empire in decline using increasing numbers of foreign soldiers and falling gradually into the hands of various Germanic races.

Europe and the world have the choice. If world conscience suffers defeat through French militarism, Europe is lost and the ultimate outcome will be chaos.

America is daily turning more from an observer into a sufferer in the European drama. The time is coming when America will be forced to discard the old Washingtonian doctrine of "let Europe and Asia fight it out" and impossible to expand commercially throughout the world while simultaneously preserving her political aloofness. America will have to "talk up" in this hour of destiny.

Praise for Borah.

As a matter of fact the United States has already started to express an opinion on the present situation. I refer to the statements of Senator William E. Borah and Congressman Louis T. MacFadden.

Their genuine Americanism asserting itself in plain everyday language. That is perhaps the reason why the man in the street has taken an interest in the involved problem. Senator Borah today is almost as well known in the world as any of the great statesmen of the past 50 years.

The now historic clash between Premier Laval and Senator Borah has served to illuminate the world problem. On one side is regional, regional narrowness; on the other side, a vast capacity to visualize problems.

defect largely in a more or less summary manner is readily understood. Only one method is adoptable and that is what will make the mark to further in order to feed our people and pay our debts. I regret very much that I am unable to give further details of this point. Why should I, by promulgating carefully thought out plans, act as a promoter to the moribund system of today?

Glimpses of Washington

Congressman Ludlow Being Groomed To Oppose Senator Watson, Veteran Republican Leader.

BY GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Democratic friends of Congressman Louis Ludlow in Indiana are laying the ground work for another chapter of his early literary efforts—a book he published a few years ago under the title "From Cornfield to Press Gallery."

Since the publication of the book he has been supplied material for an extension of the autobiography by being elected to congress. Now still a further extension is in sight by the action of his friends in putting him forward as the prospective democratic candidate for the senate against the veteran Senator James E. Watson, republican leader of that august body.

Word coming up from Indiana is that Ludlow, affectionately known by his former newspaper associates as "Louie," stands an excellent chance of receiving the democratic nomination. And if he is nominated there seems at the moment an even better chance that he will be elected.

Not since 1923, when five members of a black hand gang were hanged for a series of 20 killings, has this nation seen a more exciting election campaign than the one now being waged in the state of Indiana. It is reported to admit privately that a hard struggle is ahead. His political associates are more pessimistic than he is. They have informed him in confidential accounts that the state is sure to go democratic next year. These accounts, however, have not developed to change the situation. That something is yet to come is in sight.

As a sign of the times Senator "Jim" friends remind him that Indiana before the November, 1930, national elections the republicans had 10 of the 13 members of the state's delegation, today the democrats, with the possibility of one of the republican members-elect being unseated because of a contest. In the same election democrats captured all of the major statewide offices. It is simply in the cards for the state to go democratic next year and Senator "Jim" despite all of his popularity, is slated to go down with his party.

However much his colleagues in the senate may regret it—and that goes for republican and democrats—the present outlook doesn't seem to suggest anything that can be done to save him. Those who will miss his legislative countenance and happy disposition will miss it up with a sort of philosophical resignation found in the expression, "It is just unfortunate that he comes up next year."

Ludlow's claim to the democratic nomination is based on his record in carrying the normally republican Indianapolis congressional district by unexpected majorities in the past two elections, plus his being an indefatigable worker. In 1928 he turned a republican majority of 30,000 into a democratic majority of 7,000. In 1930 his majority mounted to 35,000. Now no one pretends to claim that any republican in the district could defeat him.

Over the state at large he is probably better known than any other Indiana congressman, due partly to his ability to publicize himself—a thing he learned through his long newspaper experience—and mostly to his tireless energy. No task is too small for him to undertake for a constituent. While an active newspaperman in Washington representing a number of Indiana and Ohio papers he was regarded as one of the hardest working members of the corps. There were no brilliant "scoops" or exclusive breaks credited to him particularly, but he was a plodder who never tired. Since his election to congress he has put into practice the same theory of tireless workmanship that characterized his journalistic efforts.

The result is that he has made friends galore in Indiana. He probably has more people under minor obligation to him than any other two congressmen of the delegation. This counts in politics.

It is an interesting story of how Ludlow came to run for congress. Before that he had never offered for office. His life as a Washington newspaper correspondent seemed set. Already passed his fifty-fifth milestone, up until 1928 he had no idea of running for office. The touch of politics given by his election put political ideas into his head. It merely showed him how easily he made friends, and so the thought of running for office was born. He now claims the distinction of being the first newspaper correspondent in history to go directly from the press gallery to a seat in the house over which he had watched.

If he should happen to be elected to the senate that would be another record. Tall, lean, lanky and affable, Ludlow, being a Hoosier, comes about his political bent naturally. He is the sort that no one dislikes personally, though some may count themselves political enemies.

A year before he was taken seriously ill and for awhile his close friends despaired of his life. While still confined to a Washington hospital one of his associates conceived the idea of putting him up as a candidate for president of the National Press Club, simply as a means of cheering him. The argument advanced in behalf of his election was that his belated spirits would be elevated by the honor, representing, as it would, an expression of sympathy from his fellow workers. He was elected without opposition and succeeded to the presidency of the club less than a year later when the president was called away from the city.

News of his election cheered him so that he began to improve immediately. In only a short time he was back on his feet and well. The touch of politics given by his election put political ideas into his head. It merely showed him how easily he made friends, and so the thought of running for office was born. He now claims the distinction of being the first newspaper correspondent in history to go directly from the press gallery to a seat in the house over which he had watched.

If he should happen to be elected to the senate that would be another record. Tall, lean, lanky and affable, Ludlow, being a Hoosier, comes about his political bent naturally. He is the sort that no one dislikes personally, though some may count themselves political enemies.

A debating team from Oxford University, in England, will meet a team from Emory University here Tuesday night on the subject of the democracy of the press. This engagement will be a home-coming day for all former Emory debaters.

The debate will be held in the Glenn Memorial church auditorium, on the Emory campus, and Robert S. Parker, prominent Atlanta attorney, will be the presiding officer.

Edward Brown and David Potter, both veteran intercollegiate debaters for Emory, will uphold the affirmative side of the subject: "Resolved that the press is democracy's greatest danger."

The negative case will be presented by the two speakers from England. They will defend the press as a democratic institution.

John Archibald Boyd-Carpenter and John Foot will be the two speakers for Oxford. Both have had wide experience in the forensic field, and are taking the platform against 27 American college and university teams during the present tour of the middle west and south.

All varsity debaters at Emory University since 1903 are being invited to attend the debate and the dinner which will be given by the debate council immediately preceding the contest.

The debate will be formal and will be a non-decision encounter. All of the former Emory debaters and all other varsity debaters now in the university will be asked to sit on the speakers' platform.

Among the speakers at the banquet preceding the debate will be Harvey W. Cox, president of Emory University, Theodore Jack, vice president, and Professor N. A. Goodyear, who is in charge of debating at the university.

Bluebeard Powers All Dressed Up For Start of Murder Trial Today

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Dec. 6.—(AP)—The principal actor in a drama of life and death, Harry F. Powers, "the Bluebeard of Quiet Dell," tonight prepared himself for the start of his "love racket" murder trial here tomorrow.

The pudgy "mail order Romeo" who wooed scores of women all over the country prepared to play his role by getting a haircut, having his clothes pressed, ordering a new shirt, selecting his most gaudy tie and having his shoes shined.

Not since 1923, when five members of a black hand gang were hanged for a series of 20 killings, has this nation seen a more exciting election campaign than the one now being waged in the state of Indiana. There is left of the subterranean death chambers, where months ago investigators found trap doors, lethal gas confessions and blood stains which led them to the conviction that there all five were executed and dropped through a trap door to the dank sepulchre below.

Southern hunters had taken away the doors, parts of the windows and even the sod that covered the ditch in which the five bodies were found.

At the opera house, which is being used because of the large seating capacity, workmen were hammering together the props for the drama of life and death.

There, in the center of a brilliantly illuminated stage, Judge John C. Southern, who condemned the five bluebeards, will direct the unfolding of the plot.

Prosecutor Will C. Morris will be a sort of stage director, putting the case of the witnesses through their parts. Eleven will testify for the defense and 39 for the prosecution.

Although public feeling once ran so high against Powers that a crowd gathered outside the jail and jeered him for an hour, his keepers said he was anticipating his appearance at the trial with keen interest.

Officials indicate that, failing to convict him on that count, they will turn him over to Illinois authorities for prosecution on the charge of kidnapping the Eichler children. Under the Illinois law he would face a possible death penalty.

If acquitted in Illinois, Powers then would be brought back to Clarksburg to face the four indictments already voted against him in the Eichler case.

Antipathetic and critical, Mayor James L. Key talked before his class Sunday morning, directly, pleasingly and earnestly for more tolerance on the part of Christians.

Taking as his subject Paul's letter to Timothy, the mayor flayed modern "Alexanders" and pointedly intimated that old standards of hide-bound Puritanism were sorely out of place in this day of need when millions of people are hungry, cold and miserable.

"The Bible says that religion is exemplified in a man's attitude toward his fellowman—and that is all it says," he said.

Taking his cue from the evil actions of Alexander, the coppersmith, referred to by the Apostle Paul in his letters, Mayor Key said that a certain type of reformer was obnoxious and a scourge.

"We should have some kind of law whereby that kind of reformer could be abated like an odorous cess-pool or any other nuisance," he vehemently said, adding that no brief could be held for any man who used his religion as an excuse to stand in the way of happiness for his fellowman.

The first cold Sunday of the winter found a slightly smaller crowd on hand to hear the lesson, but fully 900 were there early. Before the session had ended more than 1,000 people had gathered in the Capitol theater to hear the Sunday school program of light classical music, prayer and lectures.

A special welcome was extended to a party of visitors from New York City.

Bearing out his statement of Saturday that Atlanta may soon have legalized Sunday moving picture shows, Mayor Key said he had invited theater managers to submit him a proposition for holding shows open on Sunday. He did not explain any details of the "proposition."

During his talk the mayor appealed for generous support of various relief programs in Atlanta and said that it was surprising how much happiness could be secured on a small investment.

"I invested $1.00 to buy a poor little boy a pair of shoes and stockings and I've been happy ever since," he asserted, illustrating the work being done at city hall for unfortunate people.

No direct reference was made to subjects of which he has been the storm center for several months, but he alluded to his exhortation by "certain people" when he said, "Freedom has never been won without suffering—and that keeps me going."

His entire talk was for more tolerance and less bigotry, more religion and less sham.

Expressing regret that Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, could not be present to address the class, Mayor Key asserted the governor said he would try to be here next April, when he will again visit Warm Springs.

Two Blind Senators To Take Seats Today

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—(AP)—For the first time, the senate will have two blind members when it convenes tomorrow—Schall, of Minnesota, and Gore, of Oklahoma.

They will sit on opposite sides of the chamber. Schall is a republican and Gore a democrat. Both are veterans in the national legislative halls.

IS CHIANG TOTTERING?

The resignations of Dr. Wellington Koo as China's minister of foreign affairs and Dr. Alfred Sze, its delegate to the League of Nations, although withdrawn within 24 hours, have crystallized persistent rumors that the present Kuomintang administration is on its last legs.

From the time he assumed office, President Chiang has been almost continuously under attack from various groups of discontented leaders. While all of these leaders have rallied to the government's aid in the present crisis, the continued success of the Japanese in Manchuria has caused widespread criticism of his policy of inaction while the League of Nations was endeavoring to bring the controversy to an end.

Reports are now emanating from certain generally well-informed sources that the resignations of Koo and Sze were submitted not only because of dissatisfaction with the course of affairs since Japan struck at Mukden, but presage efforts by these two astute Chinese statesmen to overthrow Chiang.

Both Koo and Sze are well qualified to become Chiang's successor, and it is known that each of them has been casting covetous eyes on the presidency.

Dr. Koo probably is better acquainted with world politics than any other oriental statesman. A man of great personal force and wide education, he has been one of the leading counselors of the Kuomintang party, although having only recently been named foreign minister.

Dr. Sze is the highest type of cultured and astute Chinese. While not having the breadth of experience of Dr. Koo, his ability and knowledge of European conditions will make it almost impossible for the Chinese government to secure as able a representative at the League of Nations.

President Chiang Kai-shek, while a military leader of undoubted genius, has not distinguished himself as a statesman. In addition, he has created wide discontent among other Chinese leaders by surrounding himself with members of either his or his wife's family in his most important positions in his cabinet.

Dissatisfaction with President Chiang was largely responsible for the setting up of an independent government in Canton last spring, and while this government has been co-operating with the Nanking administration since the controversy with Japan, there has been no evidences of a change in the attitude toward Chiang.

The nationalist government has been beset with practically continuous uprisings, has signally failed to improve the pitiful condition of the Chinese people and has now permitted the country to become involved in a controversy which may bring about a war with Japan.

No general surprise would be occasioned, therefore, if a general house-cleaning in the present Chinese government should result from its apparent inability to cope with the Manchurian situation, either through direct negotiations with Japan.

OUR DIRTY STREETS.
Attention is called to the uncleanly condition of Atlanta's streets in a communication, appearing on the opposite page, from Mrs. William J. Brandon, a frequent visitor to the city.

A traveler who has visited many cities both in this country and abroad, Mrs. Brandon makes the statement that "never have I seen such a dirty city."

extent which is visible here on all sides.

We should undoubtedly have a larger and more efficient street cleaning force, but the people themselves are largely responsible for the uncleanliness of our streets. Paper and litter of all kinds are carelessly tossed into the streets without a thought of the effect on the general appearance and health of the city.

The apparent indifference of Atlantans to the cleanliness of their city is especially difficult to understand by those who have traveled to cities where due regard is given to keeping trash and dirt off the avenues by which the people go back and forth about their various ways.

It is not an uncommon sight in other communities to see an officer immediately approach some pedestrian who has tossed a paper or some other discarded article into the street. In the spotlessly clean towns of Latin-America such an offender would be hustled off to jail.

It would be well if the unemployed could be put to work at the job of keeping Atlanta's streets clean, as suggested by Mrs. Brandon, but we will never equal our sister cities in that respect until we develop such pride in our civic appearance as will cause us to abandon our careless and indifferent habit of throwing into the street whatever we have no further use for.

ATLANTA'S "HELL HOLE."

Atlanta is faced with no more urgent civic need than the erection of proper quarters in which to care for those imprisoned while awaiting trial. Conditions in the present jail are a disgrace to the good name of the city and a menace to the health of the community.

These conditions are described as "shocking" in a communication appearing elsewhere on this page from Mrs. James R. Bachman, a prominent Atlanta civic worker.

They have been declared intolerable by Chief Beavers, Chairman Richards of the police committee, and other members of council and by civic leaders who have had occasion to visit the jail.

The sick and the well, innocent and guilty, are dumped in together in dirty, unsanitary and dark holes, mislabeled cells. Many of the prisoners have to sleep on the floor, their only pillows the shoulders of their cellmates.

Worn-out plumbing and a broken-down and inefficient heating system add to the misery of the prisoners and the 40 or 50 "sleepers" who come to the jail each night for shelter.

The jail is, to use the words of Chief Beavers, a "hell hole," the like of which is undoubtedly not to be found in any other city in America.

It constitutes a shame to the good name of the city which must be removed with the least possible delay.

FARMERS' MARKETS.
At a meeting held in Marietta last week representative farmers and businessmen adopted definite plans for the operation of a farmers' marketing and exchange system to assist farmers in marketing their surplus food and feed products, and to arrange for practical demonstrations on how to produce and prepare these products to enable them to successfully compete with imported articles.

Similar projects should be launched without delay in every city and large town in Georgia so that farmers who drastically reduce their cotton acreage in 1932 may know in advance of the planting season that there will be a market awaiting their food crops.

If this is done the money that goes out of every community for imported food and feedstuffs will be kept at home; the farmers who are the first to be benefited, will put it back into circulation, and the entire community will be benefited.

Farmers of the southeastern states may be relied upon to do their part in providing ample food and feedstuffs for the section if the businessmen and citizens generally will do their part in providing a market.

The civic clubs of Marietta are reported as being actively interested in the launching of the movement for a farmers' market in that little city. Practically every city or town in the southeast has one or more of these organizations and they could find few more direct ways of bettering conditions in their communities than through sponsoring the establishment of a market.

The south annually imports a billion dollars' worth of food and feedstuffs that could be raised at home. Every county contributes its quota to this huge sum and it is not surprising therefore that conditions generally in the agricultural sections of the south have steadily grown worse.

The business and financial interests can go a long way towards putting an end to this senseless situation by seeing to it that the farmer has an outlet at home for his products.

When the divers reach the Lusitania they will find mute but incontrovertible evidence of the folly of war.

Fighting in Manchuria.

Press photographs reaching us now and then from the eastern front show that most of the fighting between Chinese and Japanese troops is of the pre-war variety, that is to say, the troops are not entrenched and the fact that artillery is captured so frequently makes it also clear that they are going to it across open country, with plenty of room to run both ways. Both parties are equipped with the most modern kill-machinery, the Japanese forces being not inferior to any European troops, but here and there is evidence of antiquated equipment.

One photo, for instance, shows a Chinese musketeer, loading his rifle in the way the Pilgrim fathers used to do it. He is seen to be stamping the powder down with a loading stick. I have always had some kind of respect for the old-time infantry. It takes more courage to load your gun in view of the enemy, advance a few steps and fire away than to lie behind a parapet and just press the trigger.

In view of the short range of the old-time blunderbusses, the opposing armies had to be close together, and the Chinese who are still equipped with this kind of arms must possess a good deal of sang-froid. But, as I said, there is lots of room to run both ways in Manchuria.

Snowden's Birthplace.

When in England recently I stopped an hour in the native village of Philip Snowden, the "Iron Chancellor of Britain." The place where he was born is a small village, Jekonshaw, where he spent his youth, will probably be incorporated in his new title, seeing that he has been elected to the peerage. Most of the people wear cloaks and the roads are marked by hoof-like marks, as if strange creatures had passed by the way. The clogs have been bitten their way into the pavement, and the roads are marked by hoof-like marks, as if strange creatures had passed by the way.

The clogs have been bitten their way into the pavement, and the roads are marked by hoof-like marks, as if strange creatures had passed by the way. The clogs have been bitten their way into the pavement, and the roads are marked by hoof-like marks, as if strange creatures had passed by the way.

There are rows upon rows of dreary, gray cottages. One of the old boys in Cowling remembered having made a great deal of money in the days of 6 and 7 the future chancellor of the exchequer, who was to make France tremble, used to be hoisted on a barrel by his playmates and would pretend to make a speech. Before he was 16 he did address public meetings on temperance. The house where he was born is the humblest. But there he lived, the flickering oil lamp, and laid the foundations of that almost uncanny insight in financial and economic questions.

There was an icy storm blowing in the district when I visited it, and it made one pull up coat collar and pull a grim face, just like Mr. Snowden in the habit of doing till the day when he faces a storm in the house of parliament.

Shocked and bruised by a shell, Private Clary was taken to an aid station and put with the wounded who were to be evacuated. He refused to be evacuated, and he joined them and participated in their attack and fought effectively with rifle and bayonet.

He took five prisoners and was ordered to escort them to the rear. On his way back he ascertained the location of his company commander, and, after disposing of his prisoners, he reported back to his organization and asked for further duty. His conduct aroused the admiration of the officers and his unit, and his devotion to duty was the most conspicuous feature of his life.

Atlanta "Dirtiest City," Writes New York Woman, Who Is Frequent Visitor

Editor Constitution: For 15 years I have been coming back and forth to Atlanta during the winter. Many times I have traveled much in this country and abroad, and I give you my word—never have I seen such a dirty city.

I should think now is the time to clean up—by giving the unemployed men and boys a job—and your Community Chest would probably be glad to pay for that kind of work.

It is pitiful to behold the broad sidewalks—littered with papers and trash and excrement—on every street in New York city are arrested for spitting in public—a filthy habit and much practiced here. When I tell people I am here in winter, they everywhere people will remark, "How can you stand that dirty place?" Well, I couldn't if I did not have interests here.

Pardon my suggestions, but it is well "to see ourselves as others see us"—and Atlanta brushed up would be a very enlightening place.

Will You Lend Him More Money To Make a Crop If He Spent the Last for a Car?

By Robert Quillen

Some years ago a man named Fritz, who had delusions of grandeur, got drunk and ran amuck on the premises of his neighbors. He broke and destroyed everything he could reach.

When he was sober again, having been overpowered and lodged in jail, he promised his neighbors to pay for the damage done. The money he possessed wasn't sufficient, but he gave notes for the full amount—many notes, to be paid one after another on the first day of each month.

The neighbors were satisfied. But the thought of paying so many notes irritated Fritz and he thought of a little scheme. He began to sign more notes, hundreds of them, and deliver them to his family and relatives. Soon these bits of paper filled the neighborhood and the neighbors said: "Fritz never can pay these things. They are worthless."

That was what Fritz wanted. He didn't go bankrupt. But he made his signature worthless and frightened the neighbors who held his first notes.

Then he said to them: "You see the shape I'm in. I can never pay out. Reduce the amount of my debt and I'll give you new notes that I can pay."

The neighbors agreed. After all, Fritz was a hard worker and seemed honest. He would pay. They said so much I can't get credit to borrow from his neighbors. His credit was good again and he began to borrow from his neighbors. He borrowed enormous sums. And after using the borrowed money to pay the notes as they fell due, he had enough left to improve and modernize his farm until it became the finest place in all that region.

Then he said to his neighbors: "I can pay no more. My boys threaten to quit work if I keep paying out what they earn. And I owe so much I can't get credit to carry on my farming. You must lend me more money or I am ruined."

"But what security have we?" asked the neighbors. "You have none," said Fritz. "But unless you lend me all I need, I'll go broke and you'll lose all I have borrowed. What is more, my boys will run wild and maybe destroy your property as well as mine."

That is the whole story. It is the history of Germany since the war. She has "paid" $2,500,000,000 in reparations. She has borrowed $3,750,000,000—most of it spent for the extravagant improvement of her land. Now she demands more loans and forgiveness of war debts under threat of bankruptcy and bolshevism.

Only suckers trust a man who has once gone bankrupt to dodge his debts.

HOLLYWOOD IN PERSON

BY MOLLIE MERRICK.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 6.—Hollywood has just learned that Ramon Novarro has been signed by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio to a long-term contract which insures his services here for a year and a half. While this particular combination is not new to us, it is unusual that a star of Novarro's youth and popularity should voluntarily want to place himself on the quiet side of the microphone.

But as one who has known Ramon Novarro for several years. I know that directing has been his ambition even though his present box-office returns are as sensational as in the days when he won the hearts of all movie fans with "Ben-Hur."

For Ramon is really a veteran of the screen, though he is scarcely over 30, and having successfully conquered the "silents," as well as the "talkies" (this includes a delightful singing career, too), perhaps it is only natural that he should look to new fields in which to work.

Directing will not be entirely new to Novarro, however, as he directed the Spanish version of his own picture, "The Singer of Seville," one of the first films that showed Dorothy Jordan as a screen personality to be reckoned with.

While it may be easy for the Lowell Sherman and the Lionel Barrymores to slip into the role of star to that of director without any great upheaval among their "dear public," I predict that Ramon Novarro is going to find a lot of trouble (a lot of us) in a deluge of fan mail by even hinting that he may eventually give most of his time to the megaphone for the picture industry.

And this was popular before we even heard of Eugene O'Neill and on being popular now that debries are in the discard.

And speaking of ambitious young men, it is announced that Frank Fay will begin work on "Foot's Ark," a film of which he is the producer, author, director and star.

You'll have to admire his courage in doing all this, as he won't have a ghost of a chance to blame anyone else if the picture isn't a success.

Ruth Hall, who has been attracted by the notice of critics by her competent work of late, will play the feminine lead opposite Fay.

With John Barrymore soon to begin work on "State's Attorney" for R-K-O, Lionel Barrymore has just been informed that his next will be a picture of a story with a Washington background.

How far beyond this similarity will go, I don't know, but it certainly gives the Barrymores a chance to show a little individuality. And it may settle for all time the exact value of a perfect profile!

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios are quite up in the air these days, with Marion Davies making "Polly" a film of which she is the producer, author, director and star.

The Marriage Racket

By VINA DELMAR

INSTALLMENT XLII.

To Irma's surprise Martin obliged, singing with easy five lines of a song utterly new and unintelligible to her. "Why, that's wonderful, baby," she was asked at his cleverness. "What can he say, Mademoiselle?"

"Come, Martin, say 'where is my hat?' No, say it in French. You see, Madame, he is bright at picking up. A few months in France would be wonderful for him."

Irma withdrew feeling a trifle awed. Fancy having a son who could demand his hat in a foreign language. It would be nice if he really knew French. She went back to the nursery to suggest that Mademoiselle speak more French to him but when she got there Mademoiselle was looking stony-eyed and describing Paris to the baby and he was looking stony-eyed, too.

So Irma did not interrupt. She went to her own room and tried to think how Paris would be if the baby were with her. It surprised her to find that her memories of Paris included nothing but the Folies Bergere, Zelli's, the noisy hotel room overlooking Rue Seize and a sick heart. She puckered her brow and tried to recall if French children looked healthy. Certainly their city was clean. The traffic was dreadfully heavy though and not particularly well managed. Mademoiselle would always be with the baby the same as she was here. He would probably get a lot of fun out of the boat trip, too.

At noon time the baby asked her when they were going on the big boat. She smiled and shook her head. "I don't know, darling." At bed time he asked her again and she gave him the same answer but the next morning when he repeated his question she said, "On the 28th of this month, sweetheart. That's soon. Do you hear, mademoiselle?"

"Ah, oui, madame. I hear. It is fine that we go."

"I hope so, mademoiselle." Irma had a sudden shiver of apprehension and drew the baby close to her.

Irma found that going to Europe could be very pleasant. It was amazing what a charming group of people one could collect within 24 hours. She thought, with a sorry little twist of her lips, how Wallace would enjoy this very superior boat. Even the one on which he had returned to America was nothing compared to this. Everything about it was pleasant but nicest of all was the warm, comforting knowledge that the baby was with her and carefully guarded by his attentive mademoiselle. Her earnest watchfulness and bright cheerfulness quite outdid themselves these days for she was on a French boat and going to Paris. Who could desire more?

Russell met the boat at Havre. He had brought Mme. Lebeau, the wife of his business associate, with him. He considered it likely that Martin's arrival in a strange country would be a thrilling enough experience to her among the child's memories for ever. For that reason he had brought the chattering and excitable Mme. Lebeau. Her effusive greetings and wild raptures over the child would certainly engage his notice enough to overshadow any significance Russell's presence at the boat may have had. Irma understood why Mme. Lebeau was there and she was deeply grateful to Russell for his kind thoughtfulness.

The drive to Paris was pleasant. There were miles of rolling green beauty dotted here and there with tiny white houses which Martin believed were doll's houses. The few hours passed swiftly enough. Mademoiselle was answering Martin's eager questions and he was pink checked and sparkling eyed. Life was pleasant.

However the high, irritable piping of Parisian motor horns swept away her feeling of security. It troubled her to consider the small, insignificant things that could take from her a mood of contentment and leave her with a dull ache in her heart. She knew it was because those shrill peep warnings were integrally woven into the impressions of Paris which she had gathered on her former trip. With a painful vividness she could see the young man in the window at the American Express office and hear his voice say that there was no mail. She could see the letter from Aunt Tessie which had told that the baby had been knocked down by the car. She could see the hotel room and in memory even recall the special odor which had hung about it consisting of dusty draperies, her own cold cream and fruit which Wallace was always buying and forgetting.

She grasped Martin's hand and held it. No other hand in the world could pull her up from the pit of despondency so surely and easily.

There were rooms for Irma at a hotel on Rue Pierre Charbon. The street ran out from the Champs Elysees and was reasonably quiet yet not isolated from the theaters and shops.

The rooms of her suite were hung in satin. Mademoiselle directed the porters and chamber maids about in French which amused Martin. Irma lay down for a few minutes' rest and the last thing she heard before falling asleep was Martin's delighted laughter. He had asked a chamber maid where his hat was and she had pointed to it thus proving that she understood.

By the time Irma awoke Martin had learned to say "Vive la France." She lay for a time listening to him shout his approval of this new, strange country. How she had suffered in this damn place. But no, it had been a different Paris then. A Paris without Martin. He was here now and mademoiselle was with him and there were satin-lined walls, a dinner engagement at the home of Mme. Lebeau and there was Russell.

She sat up in bed and shouted, "Vive la France."

Martin came running to her at this signal that she was awake. He leaped into her arms.

"Do you like Paris, honey?"

"Yes, Mademoiselle knows where there's a toy shop."

"Really? Well, you can go look at it tomorrow."

"We're going now, she says."

Mademoiselle appeared in the doorway. "It is just around the corner, Maman," she explained. "It is called 'Paradise des Enfants.' He would enjoy it so. I wish to buy him his first toy in Paris if you do not mind."

They went out then. The capable girl and the small, yellow-haired boy. Their outlines as they passed through the door made Irma wish she could draw the firm solidity of Mademoiselle's back and shoulders showed her undying devotion to duty, and Irma fancied that in Martin's little trip a stranger could guess his destination.

A knock at the door forced Irma to leave her bed. Two packages were thrust into her hand by what was apparently a special messenger. She raised a warning finger at him and said, "Wait a minute." The French money which she had acquired on the boat was a mystery to her. Wallace had been the cashier on the former trip. The boy had to have something however. What was right for him? Three ten franc notes looked nice together. Besides they were bobbing about loose in her bag. She handed him the three thin pieces of paper and watched him depart. His expression had been very strange, she thought. Well, it was too little he must think her stingy, that was all.

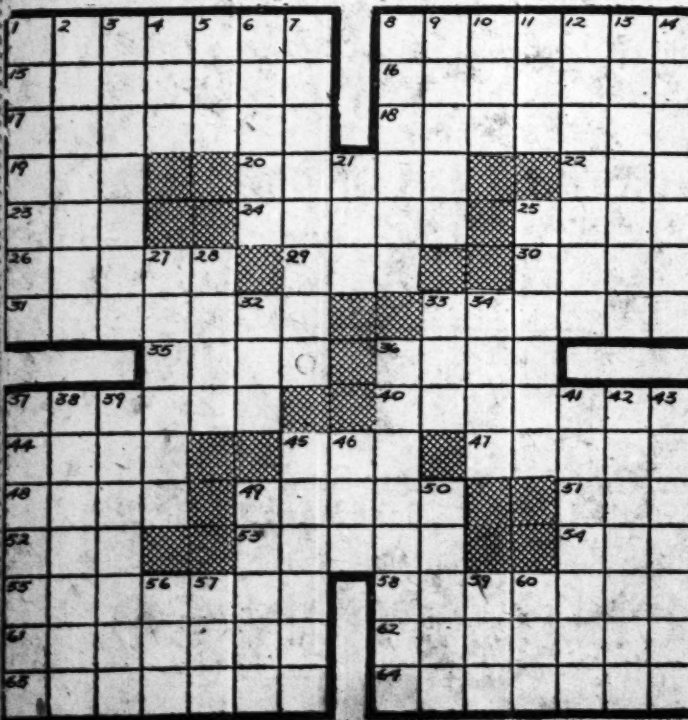

The first package was for her. It was flowers from Russell. His card said, "Now Paris is a better city than New York." She thought that was very sweet. The second package was for Martin. The wrappings bore the curious words, "Au Natin Bleu." She had no notion what that meant, but she suspected that Mademoiselle had done right in hustling Martin to the toy shop if he wanted to be first with a Parisian toy.

HUNGER MARCHERS REACH CAPITAL

1,500 Unemployed Demonstrators To Press Claims for Aid Before Congress

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Wan and weary, but with vigor left to sing and cheer, 1,500 unemployed demonstrators today came to Washington, to present their demands for help to President Hoover and Congress.

From upward of 20 states they came in two columns of trucks and automobiles, to be met at the District of Columbia line by police escorts and welcoming committees from their local headquarters.

One group, of about 600, came from the west in 24 machines, the other, from the east, in 51 machines, carrying approximately 950. Each group rode until a dozen or so blocks distant from their night's resting place, and there left their vehicles to parade afoot.

Tonight, they gathered at the Washington auditorium in a mass meeting, to go over final plans for tomorrow's march to the capitol and White House.

For their reception, the capital blazed forth in the heaviest police guard on record. The full metropolitan force of 1,400 men was ordered on duty until midnight Monday. Re-stra guards were on duty at the entrances and exits to the town.

Extra police were assigned to the White House. An officer was stationed each 100 feet around the executive mansion, with groups at the gates. An augmented guard patrolled the capitol building.

On their march tomorrow, the demonstrators will go first to the capitol to demand relief. They will have a bill for unemployment insurance provided for direct relief. From the capitol, their route lies to the White House, thence to the American Federation of Labor offices.

This afternoon, Herbert Benjamin, national representative of the demonstrators, conferred with Vice President Curtis and Superintendent Glassford, of police. Before Curtis he presented his earlier plea for admission to the senate floor.

Curtis told him and accompanying members of a committee that that would be impossible. The vice president agreed with Glassford they should be permitted to carry banners, so long as none attacked the government or was inflammatory.

UNC' BILLY IS HUNGRY.

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

There's nothing that I know quite so troublesome as appetite. —Unc' Billy Possum.

Unc' Billy Possum is seldom troubled with lack of appetite. As a rule he can and is ready to eat whenever he gets the chance and isn't fussy in regard to his food.

"Ah wish Ah had an aigg," he muttered. "Yes, sub, Ah wish Ah had an aigg. Ah wish Ah had two or three aiggs."

"What is an aigg?" inquired Runty, the smallest and smartest of Unc' Billy's 12 children who was beside him, also peering out from the edge of the Green Forest.

"An aigg is—an aigg is," began Unc' Billy and paused. "An aigg is—well, an aigg is an aigg and Ah wish Ah had one right this minute," he concluded lamely.

"What fo'?" asked Runty innocently.

"What fo'?" exclaimed Unc' Billy. "What fo'?" What do yo' want anything to eat fo'? Ah want an aigg because Ah am aigg hungry. Yes, sub, Ah am aigg hungry and growing more so every minute."

"Oh!" exclaimed Runty in his turn. "So an aigg is good to eat."

"Good to eat!" cried Unc' Billy. "Ah am sitting right here to tell yo' it is good to eat. Mah mouth is watering right now just from thinking of aiggs. Seems like Ah just must have an aigg."

"Then why don't yo' hunt fo' one and catch it?" demanded Runty.

Unc' Billy stared long and hard at Runty. Then he began to chuckle. "Yo' po'! I'll Possum," said he. "Yo' don't catch aiggs; yo' find them."

"Well," replied Runty sagely, "it seems to me foolish to be thinking about aiggs when no aiggs can be found. What made yo' think of aiggs now?"

Unc' Billy hesitated before answering. Then he grinned. It was a sly grin. "There are aiggs right now Ah reckon," said he. "What is mo', they are the best aiggs because they are the biggest."

Runty's eyes opened very wide. "Where are they?" he demanded. "Ah want to see and taste an aigg."

"No mo' than Ah do. No mo' than Ah do," replied Unc' Billy. "But these aiggs aren't in the Green Forest. They are in a house where a lot of big foolish birds called hens are kept by two-legged creatures called men. If yo' were older and bigger and wiser in the ways of the Great World, Ah might consider taking yo' over there. Yes, sub, Ah might. Ah cert'nly would like an aigg."

"So am Ah aigg hungry," said Runty, who hadn't the least idea what an egg tasted like.

Sheriff Promises To Halt Fox Hunt On Cruelty Charge

LAKE FOREST, Ill., Dec. 6.—(UP)—Sheriff Lester Tiffany called at the fashionable Onwentaia Hunt Club today to arrest the red-coated members for chasing a live fox.

Urging him on was Miss Jane Morton, society girl, who accused the wealthy huntmen of cruelty. A first-class controversy apparently was in the brewing among the elite who populate the millionaire colonies north of Chicago.

Austin H. Niblack, master of the hunt, ended hostilities for the moment by calling off today's hunt because the frozen turf might damage the hoofs of the huntmen's horses.

"I'm not going to engage in a controversy with this young woman, but if the weather is good next week, we will go ahead with the hunt, using a live fox," said Niblack.

Miss Morton, niece of Joy Morton, the "sult king," said she was shocked upon being invited to last week's hunt to see the hounds kill a "nice, tame little fox."

"It was so bewildering it didn't know what to do," she said. "Killing it was just like shooting a barnyard duck."

She called upon the sheriff to stop the further killing of foxes. The sheriff called upon the humane society to learn whether he could, legally. The humane society said yes. The next hunt is scheduled for December 13. If any more foxes are chased, the sheriff promised, he'll stop the hunters.

Boys of 'Hayloft' Club Avenge Beating by Killing Detroit 'Newsie'

DETROIT, Dec. 6.—(AP)—A "vengeance squad" from a club of newsboys shot to death 15-year-old Joe Przytas today because, they claim, he had beaten one of their younger members.

Stanley Orlenki, 14, president of the club, admitted, police said, that he fired the shot that killed Joe, but claimed he had intended only to frighten him. He is held with Joe Sawicki, 14, and Longin Jendzyski, 11.

It was Longin, police said, who named Stanley as the lad who fired the rifle shot which sent the Przytas boy tumbling down an outside cellar stairway at his home. He was found dead by his sister, who went to see why he had not returned with a bucket of coal.

Longin also named the Sawicki and Mazur boys as other members of the trio whom he had taken to Joe's home to avenge a beating. Joe was not a member of the club.

Police were undecided what would be done with the youthful slayer and the boys held as his accomplices.

Assistant Prosecutor T. A. Kennedy said the boys told him there was a special meeting of the "Hayloft Club" membership in its hayloft clubrooms this morning and it was then decided Przytas should be punished.

From there, Kennedy said, the Orlenki, Sawicki and Mazur boys went to the apartment house where "Little Joe" Przytas and the boy he was accused of mistreating lived.

Longin told them he would try to find "Little Joe" but no search was necessary as he came around a corner of the building just then, with a coal scuttle.

Stanley drew a small-caliber rifle from his trousers leg and, he says, fired at the coal scuttle shooting "We'll teach you to beat up Longin."

But the bullet missed its mark and struck "Little Joe" just above the heart.

Woman Reveals Secret Romance Of Lowell Bayles

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Dec. 6.—(AP)—A secret romance which was to culminate after the Christmas holidays in the wedding of Lowell R. Bayles and Miss Gertrude St. Marie, of this city, was revealed here today as the young woman left for the mid-west to attend the funeral of the speed flyer, who was killed at Detroit Saturday.

"I'm heartbroken. I can't believe it is true," Miss St. Marie sobbed. She explained the romance never had been revealed because Bayles told her his aviation activities were public business, but his private life was his own affair and hers.

Tribute to the memory of veterans of the War Between the States who have passed on during the last year was paid Sunday morning at the First Baptist church by Atlanta Camp No. 150, United Confederate Veterans.

PAY SLASH IS ORDERED BY SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Reduction of 10 Per Cent To Effect Salaries and Wages.

BY VICTOR EUBANK.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—A reduction of 10 per cent in the salaries of all officers and employees of the Southern Pacific Railway Company excepting those under contract or group wage agreements, has been ordered to take effect January 1, according to an announcement made at the offices of the executive committee of the company in New York today.

The announcement adds that negotiations for similar reductions are either in progress or will be initiated with the unions whose members are employed under contractual agreements governed by the railway labor act. Similar reductions for employees on the company's lines in Mexico, it is stated, are also under active consideration through the procedure provided by the laws of that country.

The Southern Pacific is the third large railway system to announce its intention to reduce salaries and wages. Officials of the New York Central some weeks ago stated negotiations were being started to cut the road's payroll 10 per cent. Recently the Chicago & Northwestern requested a 15 per cent cut all along the line.

The action of the Southern Pacific precedes by one day the beginning of a meeting in Chicago of leaders of the railway brotherhoods at which a vote is expected on voluntary wage reductions.

"I LIKE the way you put it up to us smokers to judge your cigarette by absolutely real things like mildness and better taste. Sounds like good common sense!"

Fair enough! That's all Chesterfield wants. That's all Chesterfield could ask for and does ask for—a trial.

"Promises fill no sack." After all, it's what you get out of a smoke that counts. And what you get out of Chesterfield, or anything else for that matter, depends on what goes in.

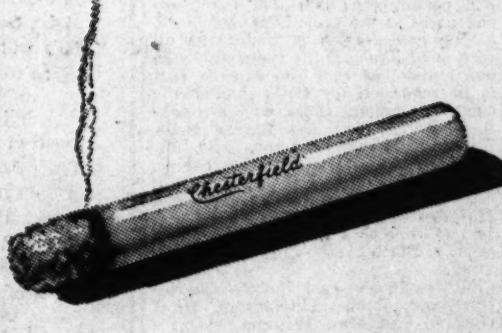

Better tobaccos don't grow than the tobaccos that go into Chesterfield. Ripe. Sweet. Aged and cured for two years under the watchful care of expert chemists.

Better cigarette paper can't be bought. Tasteless. Odorless. Pure!

Sanitary factories. Cleanliness in every step of the process. A purer cigarette than Chesterfield can't be made.

And the package! Absolutely moisture-proof. Sealed tight—yet the simplest thing in the world to open. And attractive to look at.

NEW ORLEANS COTTON DULL WAITING REPORT

There was very sluggish trading in the cotton market during the past week, mainly owing to the approach of the final government report of the season, due Tuesday morning, December 8.
Such business as developed was mainly evening up transactions in advance of the bureau, coupled with some hedging selling which was absorbed by some trade buying on the scale down.

Prices fluctuated narrowly all week,
declining at times about half a dollar a bale on pre-bureau liquidation and rallying as much at other times on covering by prudent shorts. Some fluctuations were due at times to flurries in the stock market. The new result was that the range of values was very limited and the close on Saturday showed practically no net change for the week.

The general expectation is for a DECLINE in the price of cotton, but the market is expected to be fairly firm.

guesses issued during the week ranged from 16,800,000 bales to 17,300,000 bales, averaging about 17,100,000.
Weekly statistics were rather favorable as there was a good showing by mill takings and exports exceeded the corresponding week last year by a good margin. The exports on Saturday alone totaled 117,173 bales, the largest day's total probably of the season.
